

Reflection week Eight

For the eight week we had no scheduled supervision session, two group meetings that we had scheduled ourselves and a lecture where we presented our product.

- What do I want to learn or understand better?

For this week we didn't really do anything new other than ofcourse the presentation. So that's maybe something to learn from. In general I think our presentation went well, apart from the part where I tried typing on a french keyboard. Jokes aside, it was fairly giving to the presentation and receiving questions because that's when it actually felt realistic. Questions like "what KPIs did you use in order to increase customer value" and "what would the next step be?". Made me and the whole group actually feel like it was something created for usage.

I think that one big takeaway from that at least was that I wanted to better understand a better way to showcase a product in order to not leave room for product questions. In our defense it was supposed to be a rather short presentation meaning that we couldn't include maybe as much as we'd like.

- How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

There were times during the presentation that I maybe should have left room for the other members to answer questions, as I was very eager to answer. Other than that the week was rather straightforward with not so many new elements introduced.

- What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?

This week I was not scrum master or PO but a team member. So I contributed with working on the things we had going this week: fixing the power point for the presentation, taking part in presenting, answering questions and some tasks on the trello board such as documenting code and creating a ReadMe file.

- What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?

As partly mentioned above I did some work on the presenting slides, presenting and taking questions. I did not mind as much as some members therefore I naturally pitched in to help.

As usual I also contributed during the sprint meetings by not only deciding things that POs and scrum master discuss, updated KPIs and also by organizing the trello board. This would also include me assigning myself to some task to be around the same amount of hours work as everyone else. I assigned myself to "documenting the code and creating a ReadMe file", "preparing the presentation" and "writing the final report". I completed the first together with Linus and participated in the making of the presentation as well as presenting. We did however not get the time to actually start the final report.
